“ I would like to acknowledge the value the Indiana Humanities gave to Johnson County in 2015 with a grant for our Community Conversations. This grant allowed us to bring together a very diverse group of residents, business leaders, and community activists to learn better ways to grow Johnson County economically and provide a stronger, healthier quality of life for our residents. Without this support, we would not have had the attendance and the education for our attendees to create the work we are doing today. As a direct result of these conversations, we have created trails committee which is creating a trails masterplan, we have brought awareness and support for I-69 to our residents who will be directly affected by the new interstate, and we have created two programs for teaching work ethic to our students and introducing them to a variety of careers in the manufacturing sector. These are all activities that will have long-term effects on our county and community. ”
